

How Businesses should Book airline tickets on the internet

In today's self-service world, the keys to significant travel savings are knowing where and how to shop. Web sites that began life catering to the leisure traveler (the airlines, Expedia, Orbitz and Travelocity) now promote "one stop shopping" for small businesses. Their allure is ease of shopping, policy adherence, and reporting. But are these benefits real? What about pricing, the convenience of the flights offered, the location of the hotels, and – perhaps most of all, the value of your time spent on their web site?
