Top of the line eating experience is also available to all tourists. The country's entrenched culture can easily be celebrated. At the next stage promote medical tourism will be promoted.

The increase in Taiwan's tourism can also be attributed to the many direct flights functioning across the Taiwan Strait. Aside from that, there are policies constructive for cross-Strait exchanges. During the last days of April 2012, residents of six mainland's cities were given the permission to visit Taiwan individually under a strict cross-Strait agreement. This in addition to already approved cities namely Beijing, Shanghai and Xiamen.

1.06 million mainlanders visited Taiwan from January to May of 2012. These numbers imply a 48% rise in 2011's data. These figures come directly from the Beijing Office of Taiwan Strait Tourism Association. According to Lin, the population of 1.3 billion in mainland can still be improved through promotional events in Tainan.

Li Wo-shi, a representative from Kinmen county, somewhere near Xiamen said the county had greater promotional techniques last year when he travelled to 4 different mainland cities to promote his hometown. Their visit to Qingdao and 3 other areas in Fujian gave his team amazing feedback. The society embraces policies favourable to tourism because it brings opportunities in different industries and a better understanding among people. A noticeable rise of 300,000 people as mainland travellers is composed of a mixed population of individual and group tourists. Chen Ren-He, head of Penghu Tourism Association said that he expects a large improvement in the number of mainland travellers and are ready with services to keep tourists busy and entertained.
