

Acapulco, Mexico: A Paradise Lost to Drug Wars

Acapulco, Mexico, is a beautiful coastal city with a rich history. It was once a major center for the Spanish colonial empire and a popular vacation spot for wealthy Americans. However, in the 1980s, the city became a major hub for drug trafficking, and the resulting drug wars have had a devastating impact on the city and its tourism industry.

The drug wars in Acapulco have led to a significant decline in tourism, which is the city's main source of income.

The city's tourism industry has been severely impacted by the drug wars. The number of tourists has dropped significantly, and the city's reputation as a safe and enjoyable vacation spot has been tarnished. The Acapulco (Acapulco) government has taken steps to address the problem, but the damage has already been done.

The drug wars in Acapulco have also led to a significant increase in violence. The city has become a major battleground for drug cartels, and the resulting violence has led to the deaths of thousands of people. The city's infrastructure has also been damaged, and the economy has suffered.

The drug wars in Acapulco have also led to a significant loss of jobs. Many of the city's major employers, such as hotels and restaurants, have closed their doors. This has led to a significant increase in unemployment, and many people have been forced to leave the city in search of work elsewhere.

The drug wars in Acapulco have also led to a significant loss of life. The city has become a major battleground for drug cartels, and the resulting violence has led to the deaths of thousands of people. The city's infrastructure has also been damaged, and the economy has suffered.

Date: 2012-12-17

Article link: <http://www.tourism-review.com/-drug-wars-damge-tourism-in-mexico-news3511>