

THOMAS COOK AIRLINES ANNOUNCES NEW TRANSATLANTIC ROUTES FOR 2016

The noted Thomas Cook Airlines announced earlier this month that as of May 2016, they will offer two flights a week from Manchester to both Los Angeles and Boston.

Earlier this month, Thomas Cook Airlines announced the recent addition of their transatlantic routes for 2016. Starting in May 2016, the airline will be pleased to offer two flights a week from Manchester to both Los Angeles and Boston. The Los Angeles flights will depart from Manchester each Monday and Saturday and the Boston flights will depart every Monday and Friday. Thomas Cook Airlines will be the only airline outside of London to offer these two destinations direct out of the United Kingdom.

The entire Thomas Cook Airlines UK A330 fleet was completely refurbished last summer and future passengers on the new transatlantic routes will benefit from brand new Economy and Premium seats. With the addition of four new Thomas Cook Airlines Airbus A330 long haul aircrafts early next year, the popular airline will officially be the largest long haul carrier at the Manchester Airport.

Thomas Cook Airlines operates from 20 airports across the United Kingdom and carries over 6.7 million passengers to over 50 airports in over 200 countries. The entire fleet of 32 Airbus and Boeing aircrafts are based at the Manchester Airport in the United Kingdom, where the company employs over 2,500 individuals. More information about the new transatlantic routes from Thomas Cook Airlines can be found directly on their website here.
