

DAILY SKI-PASSES IN EUROPE COST 54 EUROS ON AVERAGE

This winter season, skiers must pay few euros more than last year for daily ski-passes in Europe. In most winter resorts, the price is 54 euros for one day of enjoying the slopes.

The price for a daily ski-pass for one adult in Austria will increase by an average of 1.14 euros or 2.72%, as calculated by Skigebiete-Test.de. Skiers in Austria will now pay an average of 43 euros for a daily ski-pass.

Skiing in the Alps is the most expensive, but in Switzerland the prices are even higher. Daily ski-pass prices have increased by 0.65 euros or 1.13% to about 54 euros on average. Prices in Swiss ski resorts, however, are the most stable and show the slightest increases in four years. Italy is the leader with an average price increase of 1.37 euros - to 43 euros. Italy is therefore as expensive as Austria as of now.

This year for the first time in the ranking the cheapest ski destinations were identified. This year it is the Czech Republic, where visitors pay on average 27 euros for a daily ski-pass. Other destinations cheaper than Austria are Germany (34 euros) and France (38 euros).

On the other side of the Atlantic the price increases are by far the highest. While Italy has the highest price increases with 3.22%, the rates in Canada and USA are 6.04% and 6.81% respectively. In the US, a one-day ticket costs around $89 (84 euros), in Canada about 92 Canadian dollars (65 euros).

Date: 2016-11-28

Article link: <http://www.tourism-review.com/ski-passes-in-europe-getting-more-expensive-news5206>