

TREATMENT IN GERMANY: WHY IS IT WORTH CONSIDERING?

The question of where to get treatment arises, as a rule, when there is already a preliminary diagnosis. Consequently, the decision about where and how to be treated should be made quickly. At the same time, not all possible options are often considered, as people do not have enough information about undergoing treatment abroad. We are here to explore the option of medical treatment in Germany.

Why consider Germany?

World medicine today offers a wide range of treatment options in different countries. That is why there is no need to limit yourself to the possibilities of treatment in the native country.

Germany is one of the leaders in the list of countries with the healthcare system being advanced. The reasons for this include a high quality of medical services, a complex of preventive measures, and the timely detection of health risks (these have helped to increase life expectancy in Germany). An exceptional educational system in German medical schools provides the country with extraordinary and talented doctors. And the list isn't limited to only these aspects. Germany has long been accepting foreign patients for treatment.

German hospitals are healthcare facilities that use both international protocols and their own developments. All methods are aimed at organ preservation and reaching the best functional results. It is worth mentioning that Germany is the country where the first laparoscopic and endoscopic surgeries were performed.

The quality of German health care is also a crucial factor for many patients looking for treatment. In German clinics, special attention is paid to making patients feel comfortable. As for rehabilitation, it takes a long time after almost any surgical intervention to recover from it fully. Thus, specialists practice an individual approach, which enables achieving impressive results.

Challenging aspects of undergoing treatment in Germany

Let's look at aspects that can be challenging for patients seeking treatment in Germany.

The first one would be the belief that treatment in Germany is more expensive than in some other European countries (Greece, the Czech Republic, etc.). In most cases, it exceeds the cost of treatment in the local healthcare institutions. However, an optimal organization of your medical program can significantly reduce expenses; this should be a priority.

The second issue is connected with the hospital choice. There are a lot of good clinics in Germany, but making a choice can be complicated. First, clinics do not advertise themselves. Second, understanding the statistical data requires special knowledge; and, generally, many other difficulties in this area arise. As a solution, you can use the outside expertise to help you decide on the hospital. Specialized companies make up-to-date ratings, systematically collect information, and share knowledge and experience with patients, saving time and making the "torment of choosing" a medical facility easier.

Thirdly, there's a waiting aspect. It can take a long time to receive an answer and make an appointment if you do it yourself. However, for a company that directly cooperates with medical institutions the waiting period is minimal.

The fourth issue is, of course, a medical visa to travel and the question of how to get it during a lockdown. The answer is simple - a specialized company can help you with that, so you should not worry about it.

The fifth issue is medications being available in one country and unavailable in another. Well, they say there's no "one-size-fits-all solution", but you can purchase medicines in another country in a sufficient amount for the entire therapeutic course.

All of the above can be taken over by Booking Health. Booking Health is one of the most transparent medical tourism companies globally. The company provides patients with many helpful services, including providing a personal interpreter, a cost of treatment guarantee, and insurance against complications. Booking Health has been working during a lockdown to help as many people to undergo medical treatment in Germany as possible.
