

WHAT EUROPEAN CITIES YOU SHOULDN'T MISS?

As amazing as it is, a trip to Europe can also be a bit overwhelming if you do not know which cities to visit, which are a must-see, and which you can skip, especially if you are traveling for the first time! To plan the perfect itinerary and take full advantage, you must know of some key places to see. So, check out our list of some European cities you should definitely not miss!

Brussels, Belgium

A fascinating city with the most impressive architecture and significant landmarks, Brussels should be on your must-see list! Aside from being the administrative center of the EU, the city also has some lovely and charming sites to visit, making it impossible to miss on your Eurotrip.

First of all, see Grand Place, probably the most magnificent square in Belgium, full of intricate architecture that makes for an amazing cityscape. The main attraction here is the 15th-century City Hall, but once you start exploring, there are many more buildings just as impressive!

You should also see Brussels's Notre Dame Du Sablon and Palais Royal - two completely different sites, yet similarly important and equally beautiful!

Remember that the best way to get to know Brussels is by taking long walks and inhaling all it can offer you. Let yourself be spontaneous, and get to know the city head-on!

Amsterdam, the Netherlands

Quite close to Belgium, and one you can reach with the help of the beneluxtrains.com, the capital city of the Netherlands is one of the most intriguing, and yet misunderstood places in Europe.

While, stereotypically, Amsterdam is a place for buzzing nightlife, partying, and entertainment, in reality, this is not the case. The Dutch are actually adamant about the tourists understanding that the crazy life culture portrayed by the media is not at all what Amsterdam is about.

If you want to know the real city, we suggest admiring the artsy side of the Jordaan neighborhood or the quaint streets around the canal district. You could also see the Anne Frank House or simply take a walk through Amsterdam's Central Park!

Florence, Italy

Let's leave the Benelux region for the time being and jump to a completely different European vibe. This time, let's explore Italy's gem - Florence.

There is no better place for art-lovers to see and enjoy, as the city in itself is an art piece. With the most amazing Renaissance features, art galleries, and romantic yet historically significant sites, Florence makes for one of the most truly beautiful cities in Europe, which no one can deny.

You can see its charm by exploring the streets and remote neighborhoods, but there are a couple of places that are sinful to miss out on! Firstly, make sure to visit the Uffizi Gallery, one of the most important art galleries in the world, housing works by Botticelli, Leonardo da Vinci, Michelangelo, and many more!

The second must-see is the Florence Cathedral. An architectural marvel of the 15th century is known not only for its beauty but also for being the largest brick dome in the world! It perfectly displays the Roman and Byzantine styles, which then, later on, were adapted to forms of Classic Antiquity.

London, England

With a city so beautiful and rich as London, it is hard to decide where to start exploring! One of the most popular holiday destinations in the world, London is truly deserving of the title, with its rich history, magnificent landmarks and monuments, and distinctive European culture.

While it might sound cliché to you, you absolutely cannot miss the most widely-acclaimed attractions here if you wish to get the city's essence. And yes, by that we mean visiting the Tower of London, the British Museum, Churchill War Rooms, Tower Bridge, and many more! Only when you can confidently say that you have hit all the marks should you carry on with your own individual journey of exploration. Do not worry, though - all of it will be very fun!

Paris, France

Last but not least, let's see what France has to offer, Monsieur! It might irk you because tourists are wildly pouring into Paris, and all the attractions seem a bit outdated, but just like London, Paris is a signature city in Europe, and the attractions are what makes it so unique!

If you have enough time, after seeing the Louvre, the Eiffel Tower, or the Musée d'Orsay, head to explore Provence or Normandy! The regions are just as magical and are way less urbanized, their natural attractions standing as evidence that France can be both modern and popularized, yet at the same time untouched and pure!

While you are in Paris, we also suggest seeing Rue Denoyez, the most artistic street in the city, or the art nouveau building on Avenue Rapp. If you want to get away from the crowds and do some individual exploration - go there!

Here you go - five great European cities falling under the must-see category! If you can, try to visit them all, but it might be best if you take your time in getting to know them and allow yourself to see everything thoroughly. Have a great Eurotrip and good luck!
