

36,000 EURO FINE THREATENS FOR TOO LOUD MUSIC ON THE BEACH IN PORTUGAL

Many holidaymakers have faced high vacation expenses in popular destinations like Spain and Italy. However, those planning a trip to Portugal should also be cautious. The Portuguese maritime authority AMN is cracking down on noise pollution caused by loud music on the beach, and hefty fines of up to 36,000 euro are possible. It's essential to be mindful of these regulations and avoid unnecessary expenses during your holiday.

Up to 36,000 euro fine for music on the beach

Do you enjoy unwinding on the beach and listening to the waves lapping but are irritated by loud music drowning out the natural sounds? In Portugal, a new law is set to ban sound equipment and noise-generating activities that may cause a disturbance. The AMN has stated that anyone caught playing music in a group may face a fine ranging from 2,000 to 36,000 euro.

According to the AMN, individuals may face penalties ranging from 200 to 4000 euro for excessive noise. The authorities may also seize related items such as loudspeakers. Tourists and locals are urged to report any noise disturbances on the beach. However, "too loud" has not yet been established.

The AMN has a solid commitment to keeping the coasts of Portugal quiet. The high penalties are meant to serve as a deterrent and encourage individuals to be more considerate of others.
